ABSTRACT

The present invention provides a cable-air management adapter system ("CAMAS") that addresses airflow, heat buildup and cable routing concerns in enclosures that house electronic equipment. The CAMAS allows users to work from a single frame to increase an enclosure's size by adding multiple expansion channels that form a platform on which multiple airflow, heat dissipation and cable support management options are installed, eliminating the need to replace the enclosure.